The Girl in Blue.

AT PRUD. W. LORING.
Oh, have you seen the girl in blue?
That lives far down the street?
With modest dress,
And sweet smile?
The girl on the street?
Her beauty, bloom and smile—
A ribbon and a rose all;
But her gold
Blossoms are cold,
Crown the girl on the street.
Her rolling collar gives in sight
A tender blush on her cheek;
And when she smiles
And sweet smile,
Wears the girl on the street.
A sweet, soft hand for mine to grasp;
A slender waist for me to clasp;
A little foot
And a dainty foot—
Dear girl on the street!
Oh, lips as red as roses rare!
Thy eyes as bright as stars!
To come to mine!
What were to mine?
Sweet girl on the street!

PRESIDENTIAL PROSPECTS.

From the Golden Age.
THE DOWNFALL OF THE GREAT PARTIES.
It is usual in the history of politics that when a nation is divided into two great political parties, of those who rise and the other who fall, one of the parties is usually the victor. But the political situation in America seems to forecast the simultaneous downfall of the Democratic and Republican parties. The signs of the times point to a new political era, and the old parties are already in the process of dissolution. The better elements of both the existing parties are now flocking to the banner of a new party, and the worst elements of both are also flocking to the banner of a new party. The result will be a new party, and the old parties will be no more.

The favorite pastime of Napoleon at St. Helena was to convince himself how he might have won the battle at Waterloo. In like manner, the leading intellects of the Democratic party are now busy in the study of the question of how they might have won the election of 1860. They are not content with the philosophy of what "might have been," but they have steadily believed that the Democratic party was the standard-bearer of the Democratic nomination, would have been elected, and would have won the election. And it is just as easy to see that the Democratic party in 1872 as it was in 1860. The Democratic party cannot do it by nominating a Democrat. That party then, and failed. Tried again, it will fail again. But if the Democratic party should nominate some such statesman as Charles Sumner, and put under his feet some such platform as "the new 'structure,'" it would appear to be the best chance it has for success.

We have said that the two great parties appear to be going into decline together, and a new combination is destined to arise out of the ruins. If anybody thinks that the recent victory over Sumner and his associates has given promise of Republican success, we answer that no honest Republican claims that this victory—of which Charles O'Connor, Samuel J. Tilden, Horatio Seymour, and Charles Sumner were the principal actors—has given promise of Republican success. It was the people's verdict against fraud and their perpetrators; and their judgment would have been rendered with effect in a single year. Let the chiefs of Tammany be Republicans instead of Democrats. And as the better class of Democrats have combined with the better class of Republicans with such effect in a single year, and let the question naturally occur to them, why can they not as readily and advantageously combine in the next Presidential contest? All the Democratic and half the Republican party are now in the hands of the Tammany administration next year, rather than a repetition of the old. They can accomplish their desire by a unity of effort. What is a possible plan?

The opening of the year will find a large number of leading statesmen of both parties within consultation-range of one another in Washington. Let this number be augmented by the presence of some of the leading statesmen of the other party. Let the conference be held—friendly and confidential. If such men as Charles Sumner, Carl Schurz, and Lyman Trumbull could combine with such Democrats as Charles O'Connor, Samuel J. Tilden, Horatio Seymour, and Charles Sumner, the result would be a new party, and the old parties would be no more.

There are two kinds of Grant men who will soon desert the President's falling fortunes, one is the Schuyler Colfax type, who never do a brave act in politics, and who make a high-toned expediency the supreme rule of their action; the other is the Gen. Butler type, who bear a strong resemblance to an alms-house inmate, or an incompetent President—and who when awake, arise, and walk like giants, with no less heroic resolution than the latter. These two men to join their opposite temperaments into a united wish to saddle this nation four years more with a Presidency which has been nothing more than a man and his fortune. The whole of the nation is now in a state of confusion, and the only way to save it is by a new party, and the old parties will be no more.

The opposition to the present Administration is fragmentary and incoherent. It includes an old party broken down by the weight of its own sins and infirmities, and fragments of the Republican party, who are drifting about in the sea of politics like the floating islands which travelers report to have been in tropical waters, with a motion to uncertain tides. It is impossible to unite these fragments into a single party, and the only way to save the nation is by a new party, and the old parties will be no more.

ministration, it is neutralized as to man by the localized antagonism of parties. The want of coherence, or of some central influence that shall draw together these warring and fragmentary elements is felt, and acknowledged, by discerning and thoughtful men. More opposition to the Administration, to the re-nomination of Gen. Grant, is not sufficient. That takes on the character of a mere war of the words upon the issue. It is not efficient for the formation of a party having the weight and momentum of a national movement. Any attempt to organize it in that shape will prove a failure. Such administrative measures have tended to break up the Republican party, or driven off from it any considerable masses, were before the country eight months ago; and it is doubtful whether they now possess the power of disintegration that they had at their initiation.

Among the obstacles to the welding together of the elements of confusion, as now apparent, they can be described as follows: First, the divergence of principles between the Reform Republicans and Democrats as wide as that which exists between Administration Republicans and Democrats. Upon this analysis, it will be found that there are very few things common between them. In general terms, agreed upon the questions of tariff and revenue, civil service reform, general amnesty and consolidation as certain influential newspapers and leaders advise is impossible. Nothing is impossible in American politics. But it will prove a work of greater delicacy and difficulty than has been imposed upon any body of men within recollection.

The Anti-Grant Movement.
Dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—It is now beyond question that a movement is being inaugurated at this point to oppose the re-nomination of Grant for the Presidency next summer. Several leading Republicans and Democrats have been approached within the last few weeks, and a programme is now being developed which will look to the nomination of some liberal Republican who will be able to carry so far as tariff, amnesty, and civil service reform questions are concerned. The Democracy are expected to support any such man as may be subsequently agreed upon, and will appear to be able to draw upon the Republican strength the heaviest. According to this programme, the Democracy will make no nomination, but will postpone holding their election until the year 1876. It is expected by them that the Republican disaffection to Grant will be so strong that it will be felt in the next Presidential Convention, and the Democrats will rally whatever number the voters may see fit to recommend. It is stated that every such bitter Democrat as Senators Bayard and Casserly have given in their adhesion to this plan, and that the plan will be more perfected in detail when Congress comes together.
